CEREBRAL PALSY--MEDICAL TREATMENT

574. Hipps, Herbert.
An evaluation of certain non-operative methods used in the treatment of cerebral palsy. J. of Bone and Joint Surgery. July, 1948. 30-A:3:695-698.
"Several years of experience in the conservative treatment of cerebral palsy have caused the author to doubt the value of some of the commonly used therapeutic procedures. A review of the current literature did not clarify the subject. Hence it was decided to test the more common therapeutic agents by using only one at a time, for a specific period, on a group of patients, and to attempt to measure the beneficial results of each. Thirty-five patients with cerebral palsy were selected for this study; eighteen were predominately of the spastic type, twelve were largely of the athetoid type, and five were of the ataxic group...
An analysis of the statistical details indicates that the following individual therapeutic measures, as defined, are of no value in the treatment of spastic and athetoid patients: muscle-stretching exercises; prolonged immobilization; heat, in the form of baking; and light massage. The following procedures are of limited value: guided rhythmical passive exercises and pool therapy. The most valuable procedures are: bracing (for walking), coordination exercises, diversion exercises, and repetitious unaided individual efforts. No conclusions were formed in the ataxic group, as the number of patients was too small..."

BULLETIN ON CURRENT LITERATURE

The publications listed in this issue have been received by the library of the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults and are available for loan. The library does not stock copies for sale. Prices are listed, when known, so that orders may be addressed directly to the publishers. The publications are listed by author and title under the subject heading by which the item is cataloged and filed in the library. The subject headings in the Bulletin can be identified by being in all-capital letters.

Because the library may have only a limited number of copies of any item listed, and because of the great number of requests frequently received, it is suggested that the resources of local libraries be investigated first. The services of the library are extended to organizations and individuals whose local resources are so limited as to make information otherwise unavailable. It is understood that the borrower agrees to pay shipping charges for sending him the loan material and for returning it to the library.

The National Society for Crippled Children and Adults is a nationwide organization with headquarters in Chicago and more than 2,000 member state and local societies for the crippled and handicapped throughout the country. Its many projects and services are directed and supervised by professionally trained specialists. The Society provides services in health, welfare, education, rehabilitation, recreation, and employment to all types of handicapped persons. All services of the Society are established and carried out in a manner to supplement and extend and not to duplicate or compete with the services of any other agency, public or private. The National Society is supported by the annual sale of Easter Seals.
